By the time it ended in 2002, Frasier had been running for a stunning 16 seasons and 256 episodes. This list doesn't take into account reruns, specials, or spin-offs, and it doesn't include the streaming giant. But it's more than a decade! That's just insane! Frasier was actually the second longest running primetime sitcom, behind Cheers which ended after 16 seasons and ended in 2004. They're widely considered to be very similar shows -- which to an extent is true, but also they don't quite match up in regards to ratings. Frasier was more consistently popular than Cheers and many episodes of Frasier would be more popular than an episode of Cheers. This shouldn't come as a shock, but Cheers was also much better suited for mid-season revivals because it didn't rely on on a same-day-same-network-name-on-another-network format. So it was able to make time for those revivals. As it turns out, Cheers had to do things like time travel to send the cast back to the past... so this makes a bit of sense. Cheers lasted a lot longer than Frasier. Cheers ran for 16 seasons, while Frasier
