Onload of a page in a Web Application, call a method in windows application? A: Yes, you can do this. You can do this in code behind of the page. See the following article, which describes a scenario very similar to the one you've described, and shows how to implement the scenario: Implementing Shared Web Application Scenario by MSDN In your case, you would simply get the main page element which contains the current page (usually a webform), like this: protected void Page_Load(object sender, EventArgs e) { // Determine what page the request is for. HtmlPage page = (HtmlPage)HttpContext.Current.Handler; Type pageType = page.Document.Body.ContentType; string pageName = pageType.Name; HttpRequest request = (HttpRequest)HttpContext.Current.Handler; string requestUrl = request.Url; // Do something. } Peaceful, serene 'teeming with wildlife' spaces are in high demand on the middle east's shores, say researchers By Caroline Wyatt If you want to experience an ancient culture while travelling in the middle east, then you really should add a desert safari to your holiday itinerary. Expatriate tourism in the Middle East has grown rapidly in the past two decades. Be it music festivals or weddings, people are increasingly heading abroad to feel the pulse of an entirely new
