August 1995 Nr. 104 30.(CNN) -- If you thought "Titanic" was the last family-friendly movie, you obviously haven't seen Disney's "Cinderella," which is due to be released in theaters this month. The 89-year-old classic will feature a new, costumed prince, the fairytale witch's familiar, a heroine dressed in the crimson robe of a Russian princess and the prince's stepmother demanding a baby. Why?

Well, you'll need to read the film's official synopsis to find out. But here is a brief summary so you know what to expect. In the 1700s a penniless young woman, Cinderella, is taken to the palace where the king and queen are searching for a bride. She is told that to be the best princess they must have a certain number of children, which is odd because Cinderella is already "the prettiest one in the kingdom." That night, Cinderella is chosen as the royal couple's centerpiece. Then, she gets a special gift. One of the palace staff puts a glass slipper on her foot, hoping it will be magically transformed into the prince's, but the slipper remains stuck on her foot. That's where the "Cinderella" begins, as Cinderella awakens the next morning to a message announcing the king and queen have sent an invitation to her godmother, a mysterious, intimidating woman. Cinderella's godmother refers to Cinderella as "a bargain" since she was able to pay a price that might not be in her best interest. But Cinderella is still determined to find out more about the offer her godmother made her, and her family back home. Meanwhile, the prince is desperately searching for a bride, too, because he has a curse placed on him by a witch who was an enemy of his mother's. Cinderella attends her sister's ball and is kissed by a handsome young prince. They are shortly
