We have removed an unnecessary dependence on ssh-agent which was causing authentication dialogs to fail when it should have run successfully. We have also added a new feature to Déjà-dup's command-line tool, "dupguard". This is a tool which examines files and directories and reports back to you if it detects changes. It is possible to choose to be notified of all changes made to a directory or just changes made to a particular file. We are also working on removing the requirement to use ssh-agent on linux. This is because we've been told there are security 3e33713323
