"We are excited to become part of this industry leader," James Rogers, Liberty Global's chief commercial officer, said in a press release. "We believe this acquisition will add an important element to our market presence, both in Europe and North America." Liberty Global already owns stakes in British broadcaster BSkyB and airline BMI. Terms of the deal were not disclosed. "Bwin.party is a global leader in sports betting, a segment of the industry with major growth potential," Liberty Global chairman and CEO Greg Maffei said in a statement. "Together, Liberty Global and Bwin.party will bring sports betting to new markets while increasing consumer choice and providing a first-class sports betting experience in the U.S." According to the press release, the two companies will combine their U.S. operations into a newly created joint venture to "increase consumer choice and provide a first-class sports betting experience." The U.S. operations of Bwin.party are based out of Westchester, New York, and will be operated by Amaya Gaming Group, a subsidiary of Liberty Global. "We are excited to be part of Liberty Global, which has had a tremendous track record in launching new sports betting markets and provides us with the resources necessary to increase our brand and go after new customers," Zsolt Csik, chief operating officer of Bwin.party North America, said in a press release. Liberty Global currently operates pay-per-view sporting events in Europe and North America, and has a significant position in the U.S. pay-per-view sports market. In a press release, Liberty Global added that it will use Bwin.party's robust portfolio of sports betting brands in Europe, including Bwin.party Betfair, to increase its presence 77a5ca646e
