This is in contrast with the traditional approach of starting with a small number of questions at a time and updating the database and then displaying the results for a new quiz. In all of our previous quizzes, it was necessary for the question to be stored in a database. We were not able to check for answers, display cached results for a new quiz, or give a special one-time bonus to a user who won the game. In order to eliminate these limitations, we decided to make a new database schema where questions are stored separately from answers. The database now acts as a cache, storing a question's answer for the question's specific user. For this reason, please treat all pre-generated questions as if they were brand new. Now that the questions are treated as separate entities from answers, Flix Trivia is able to do some things other Quiz-App questions cannot. 1) Your points are stored per user, so if you are the only one to submit a question or answer, your points will be immediately awarded. The total points earned by the users taking the quiz is stored for future reference. You can check your scores on a per-user basis. 2) Questions are added or deleted dynamically. There is no need to refresh the whole page to ask a question. Please note that the scores of the users who see a question are not recorded. Users are able to check their scores for a specific question on a per-user basis. How are questions and answers separated? Flix Trivia uses database technology to store quizzes and answers. It is a multiple-choice where you get a question, you answer it, and you
