The letter of credit is a bank document which is sent by the applicant, generally a business entity, as an assurance to the bank that a debtor will pay the seller for the goods he/she is ordering. Such assurance will be sent by the applicant once it has paid a sum of money in its account with the bank. The Bank issues a credit to the applicant, and the Credit is paid to the seller when the goods are delivered. Letter of Credit can be applied to, and used for, any purpose for which a credit could be issued. Letter of Credit is an irrevocable assurance given by a bank for payment of a third party to a merchant. Letter of Credit must be specially handled by a buyer, as he must be supplied with certain information by the bank so as to confirm that the seller indeed possesses the good he is offering for sale. This information is supplied by bank via a Letter of Credit Certificate. Letter of Credit is an irrevocable guarantee given by a bank to a seller, to a buyer to a seller, or to a buyer to a buyer. Letter of Credit is a bank guarantee that the purchaser will pay for goods sold. Letter of Credit is an irrevocable guarantee by a bank to a seller or buyer that he will be paid for the goods sold, once he provides the documents specified in the credit to the bank. A letter of credit is a contract of credit between a bank and its customer. The terms of a letter of credit are usually agreed upon by the customer and the bank when the letter of credit is opened. The customer generally pays for the letter of credit when it is opened and the bank issues a credit to the customer based on this. If the customer pays for the letter of credit, he will receive the credit. If the customer does not pay for the letter of credit, the bank will issue a letter of credit to the customer, and the customer is responsible for the payment of the credit. It is common practice for the bank to send a letter of credit to a customer. When the customer receives this, the bank becomes the letter of credit issuer and the customer becomes the letter of credit applicant. The customer who is going to obtain a letter of credit from a bank is usually a buyer. When a buyer obtains a letter of credit from a bank, it is referred to as a C/L. The bank that issues a letter of credit is the issuer. The customer
