"There will come a day when your God-given impulses, your true desires and passions, once again want to be expressed through art," said Crayola executive director Laura Glatzer. "You will discover yourself as an artist." "Crayola is going to keep its finger on the pulse of what kids do, and make crayons that are on trend," said Bob Miller, chief marketing officer of Crayola. In the 1960s, the company made playthings for babies, including "You're a Good Thing" baking mats that came with a trio of sculpted animals. "We had a hard time selling them," recalled Glatzer. Today, Crayola's kids' crayon-making kits come with brightly colored paper tubes, and re-usable crayons, rather than a gloppy mess of wax and pigment. The company's whimsical Crayola Play doodle-style crayons have been around since the 1960s. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox "One child in particular makes a damn good use of Play," said Miller. Crayola, whose roots date to a small family-run business founded in 1884, produces about 3,300 colors in 64 brands. From left, "Wise Owl" and "General Patton" will replace the "Smart Rat" and "Abraham Lincoln" crayons in the $18 Play Palette Crayola. Other limited-edition colors include "Spooky Owl," "Sea Life," "Pirate," "Liberty Bell," "Polar Bear," "Planes" and "Voodoo."Culprit for cataract surgery by THE
