Use KeyMacro to control your desktop from an external keyboard or other input device. You can set what keys of the keyboard you wish to use. For example, you can set the keys "c", "v", "b" and "f" as shortcuts for some commands, or you can use "h", "j", "k", "l" to control the cursor position, or "1", "2", "3", "4", "5", "6", "7", "8", "9", "0" to enter numbers. You can even map any keyboard key to a different command, provided that it does not conflict with another macro command. In addition to macros, you can set the keyboard shortcuts directly. In this case, the commands for the keyboard you want to control will be activated when you hit a key with that command. This way, you can use the keyboard of your computer to navigate through files, launch applications or scripts, and much more. In addition to keyboard shortcuts, you can assign keyboard shortcuts for other actions. For example, you can assign a shortcut for toggling the toggled state of the main menu. Another example of a shortcut you can set is a shortcut for displaying the Mac's Help screen. Please note that you will have to use the graphical interface of KeyMacro for every
