An 11-year-old boy with severe aplastic anemia developed paradoxical worsening of the disease after two years of immunosuppressive therapy with cyclosporin A (CyA). Therapy was switched to tacrolimus (Tac) monotherapy at a dose of 0.05 mg/kg/day. Tac levels were monitored daily and Tac dose was adjusted in a dose-finding trial. We administered 4 mg/day as the starting dose and titrated the dose gradually to the goal trough level of 10 ng/ml. Two months later, the blood cell count worsened and a bone marrow aspiration revealed severe pancytopenia. After changing Tac to cyclosporin, the peripheral blood cell count returned to the baseline state. Tac has been shown to be effective in suppressing T-cell activation in patients with aplastic anemia. In this case, the administration of Tac as monotherapy resulted in the paradoxical worsening of the disease. Although we could not identify the specific mechanism for this worsening of the disease, it is important to recognize the paradoxical worsening of aplastic anemia during the immunosuppressive therapy in patients with aplastic anemia.#ifndef __NVKM_PLL_H_#define __NVKM_PLL_H_#include struct nvkm_pll_vals { struct { u32 fvco; u32 ssel; } m; struct { u32 freq; u32 refcount; u 2edc1e01e8

Comments and reviews There is no need to have read the manual, since the scan is all done by the program. The scan quality is good, even when changing to 10 copies of the same scan. I chose to save a JPG file of the scans, and I can say that it's a very good choice. The installation was very simple, and the download was very fast. Everything was very easy to use, and I was able to get to work with the scanner after only one day of use. On the downside, the auto-detection of my scanner doesn't seem to work very well, because I had to tell the program to choose my scanner by using the scan pattern. And I don't know why it is like this.
