]]>2015-01-11T22:25:00-08:00 the server monitoring into a service A few years ago, system administrators were encouraged to use tools like Ping and Nmap to provide a set of quality of service metrics about their servers. These tools report things like average ping times and number of open ports, but are really just helping you understand what's going on with the system. Today it's much more about using monitoring systems to look after your servers. The rise of cloud computing and virtualization means that you may have a dozen or more servers at different sites, and with that comes monitoring challenges: when does a server go down? What's causing it to go down? This is where Zabbix comes in
