Download Froe Student of Former Rangers midfielder leaves a match, he would come away from it worse for wear. In the twee hush of Rangers' Ibrox Stadium, he falls over, he gets knocked over by another player or, in his latest scrape, gets ensnared in his own studs. "I get these cuts all the time," says Gavin Butler, sitting in the dressing room after a hard-fought game. "I don't know whether the haematoma is from a kick or just a graze, but the damage is always the same, and the haematoma never goes." And with his final 20 minutes coming in under the eye of the match officials, often with the referee watching from above him, you sense it's a recurring trauma that is hard to heal. Despite all the drama, all the joy and the time he felt as much a part of the Rangers family as the players, the back-up goalkeeper took a back seat to no one at Ibrox. "There was never a time when I felt uncomfortable, or got the feeling I was being ignored," he says. "I was right on the end of the bench at Whitehall [the Rangers youth team training ground in the south Glasgow suburb] and, when I go back there now, I think they'll miss me a bit because I was always the most reliable one they could turn to in times of need." With Eric Blackwood the recent player-of-the-month, Butler was part of Rangers's business-as-

Menu Header Splunk used a lot for me at Summit. The little company that could. In my new job I'm using Splunk so I'm posting about the lessons learned. There's not a lot you can do to start and end the day excited. You come in, open up your presentation, write a brief bit about it, hope you had a good day, and put it all in a box. Problem is, if you don't have good or interesting information, no one is going to remember you. So, after we were first shown a concept presentation from a product team for a specific type of issue we knew that we could make such a presentation and use Hadoop to parse the data to make a presentation that would be a lot of fun and help us understand the issue better. And, I thought: "Is Splunk the only tool for the job?" It is true that Splunk can be used for pretty much any job that involves analysis of data. That doesn't mean that it can't be made to be more powerful. And, it definitely can be made to scale better. But, if you are going to use Splunk to build a presentation, you might want to look at it a bit like you are building a dashboard. What I'm about to tell you might sound obvious but, in our work we found people that don't use Splunk ask: "What's the point?" It's not just a matter of what you use. It's where you get your information and how you analyze it. You can't just say: "We didn't use Splunk, we had to do it another way so it's not really valid." I started to ask the people what they did and how they did it. I thought it might be a good topic at a conference. Here's the real picture. The teams doing the analysis 04aeff104c
