A “nested” window is any window that has a pane of content within the window, rather than isolating the content of the window within an outer frame. A nested window allows content to be viewed without blocking out some of the window’s content. You can use nested windows for three major purposes: to manage sets of data, layers and tools in any order, to provide a multi-step process that works without distracting users, and to provide a mode for multiple users to make changes at once. Because of the new relationship feature, you can also share your Adobe Creative Cloud for Teams and Professional users with your team via workspace or private URL. If you qualify for this, you can get the benefit of running your team in one workspace that is made up of your premium subscription users, rather than having them licensed individually. As you add more complex transitions, the complexity of your animation will increase. You have a lot more control over how the animation looks through motion path editing, so the downside of more options is the easier you can make it for your audience to get to those options. The app sports two settings: Move and Scroll Touch Zoom, the latter being able to basically do anything. Allow Touch Zooming can make scrolling in lists and pages a lot simpler, further improving the overall performance of the app. Enable Motion Paths can be used to make shortcuts for common tasks, so you can save time, which keeps your phone from slowing down while you’re doing those tasks.
