I'm still traveling but I'm slowly getting back on track and moving into a new lifestyle. For your reading pleasure here are some of the things I've done since I last posted. I've been back to my old stomping ground: Minneapolis and had a killer day of shooting: Here is a sum of my work so far: A photo of my favorite coffee place: A photo of my favorite place to eat in the Twin Cities: A photo of my favorite place to buy work related attire: A photo of a cool friend of mine: A photo of a locally born friend of mine: A photo of the best gift I received from my friend that day: On this day, Tilda and I started a new chapter in our adventures. I'll share it in its own post. Next will be one of the areas that I intend to visit this summer. Here are some of the photos I took while in Seattle: The first day I went up to Lynn Valley. Lynn Valley is a mountain range on the outskirts of Seattle. On the second day I went

Organic cherry juice prevents lipid accumulation and steatosis in a transgenic obese mouse model. The treatment of hepatic steatosis with simple lifestyle interventions has been investigated in several animal models but remains challenging in humans. The mechanism of how organic cherry juice (OCJ) ameliorates lipid accumulation in the liver is still unknown. We investigated the anti-steatotic effect of OCJ in HSL-Tg mice, which have a transgenic deletion of HSL (hormone-sensitive lipase) in liver and a subsequent lipid accumulation phenotype. HSL-Tg mice were fed a high-fat diet supplemented with either water or 10% OCJ for 5 weeks. OCJ supplementation lowered body weight, fasting blood glucose levels, and the levels of liver enzymes AST and ALT and increased insulin and adiponectin levels in serum. OCJ treatment also resulted in a decrease in lipid accumulation in the liver as shown by histological analysis. The levels of fatty acid synthase, de novo lipogenesis, and fatty acid β -oxidation in the liver were lower in OCJ-treated HSL-Tg mice than in untreated mice. OCJ treatment also increased the phosphorylation levels of AMPK and acetyl-CoA carboxylase. In HSL-Tg mice, OCJ supplementation decreased the expressions of sterol regulatory element binding protein-1c, acetyl-CoA carboxylase, and fatty acid synthase and increased those of insulin receptor substrate-1 and AMPK. OCJ treatment attenuated hepatic steatosis in HSL-Tg mice by suppressing sterol regulatory element binding protein-1c and activating AMPK, which are key mediators of fatty acid metabolism and inflammation. The results of this study suggest that OCJ could serve as a novel functional food that might be beneficial for patients with nonalcoholic fatty liver disease.
