Distribution of alpha-2-macroglobulin in rat salivary glands. In the rat, alpha-2-macroglobulin was localized in the cytoplasm of acinar cells by immunohistochemical methods. The results indicated that the secretory granules containing the protein do not co-localize with the secretory granules containing amylase. The immunoelectronmicroscopic studies suggest that the granules of alpha-2-macroglobulin are confined to the basal membrane of the acinar cells. The distribution of this protein in the submandibular and sublingual glands was also studied. Extended-range fiber optic confocal microscopy: a new tool for cellular and molecular biology.
