The two countries also decided to hold discussions about a bilateral investment treaty and "frank and detailed discussions" on some other issues, including intellectual property and trade in agricultural products. Froman said the discussions were aimed at finding "mutually acceptable solutions" to trade problems and address concerns that have blocked progress in the trade talks. "We remain confident that we can find a way forward, but the objective that we have today is to start having constructive consultations," he said.Q: Read text
