I had been a devoted user of Lightroom 4 until I upgraded to Lightroom 5 because I wanted to try some of the new features, which was a good decision as Lightroom 5 has drastically improved, especially the synchronization which is remarkable for a freeware. Here is my take on Lightroom 5: I was really excited about Lightroom 5 as I've been one of the ardent loyal users of Lightroom 4. I immediately tried the new features and have been a very satisfied user. So now I'd like to talk about the new features that I wanted but wasn't able to find in Lightroom 5.

My main areas of interest {include} refining images, those particular images I'm trying to make either or both look better or just modifying some small thing like a color balance or a d-light-tap. But I also like to create artistic images with a scenic or a nature theme. I'm not very interested in doing photo collages. I do feel sometimes it's somewhat essential to add one or more additional pictures, which are later deleted. For me, small collections of collages aren't of value or I'd send a photographer a couple of blank cards and they lend themselves to experimentation that way.

In Lightroom 4, I learned to process my images manually and my workflow is somewhat similar to what I've described. Actually, Lightroom 4 was my main image editor for a while. I use both the HDR and exposure bracketing features, although I also use Photoshop for that. I was really excited about Lightroom 5 as I've been one of the ardent loyal users of Lightroom 4.
