A gas chromatographic procedure with electron-capture detection has been developed for the determination of p,p'-DDE and HCH isomers in human serum. The procedure employs butyl ether extraction with removal of the cholesterol fraction, automated glass vial derivatization, and gas chromatographic analysis of the o-tertiarybutyltoluene derivatives with electron-capture detection. The detection limit for each compound is 10-15 pg (ng/ml) of serum. The method has been used for the determination of concentrations of organochlorine compounds in human serum from human volunteers and from blood bank donors in Michigan.A case of acute traumatic palmaris brevis muscle rupture. Palmaris brevis is a relatively small, triangular-shaped muscle lying deep in the palm of the hand with two branches. It functions to retract the hand and fingers. It is also known as the golden muscle. It provides dynamic adduction of the fingers and wrist, and is occasionally broken or stretched during extreme flexion. Rarely, it can be ruptured acutely, which is a true cause of acute closed hand lacerations. This paper presents a case of palmaris brevis rupture.--------------------- Forwarded by Jason Williams/HOU/ECT on 11/07/2000 07:15 AM ------------------------- From: Melissa White@ENRON on 11/07/2000 07:01 AM To: Jason Williams/HOU/ECT@ECT cc: Subject: GLENN HERE ARE THE ORDERS - I BROUGHT PICTURES TOO - LET ME KNOW WHAT YOU NEED! --------------------- Forwarded by Melissa White/Corp/Enron on 11/07/2000 07:02 AM ------------------------- From: Bryce Baxter
