I have tried using Flexisign Pro 10.5.1 and the hotfix I have included with this keygen.Portable devices such as personal digital assistants (PDAs), cellular telephones, wireless telephones, pagers and the like are currently in widespread use. In addition, systems are being proposed and implemented in which the smart card itself contains the identity information and thus the card can be used to identify its owner. An example of such a system is the new Basic Access Service (BAS), specified by the GSM system which relies on a "KIK" procedure, illustrated in FIG. 1A and described in GSM 03.34. The KIK procedure involves the dual use of an access code that is associated with a user "subscriber" and a Home Location Register (HLR) that holds the other identity information about the subscriber. In particular, the "master key" is used to encrypt the subscriber's own identity information, and then the key value encrypted with the master key is used as a one-way function to encrypt the subscriber's identity information. The HLR uses its own one-way function to decrypt the subscriber's identity information and passes the decrypted information to the portable device. If the identity information is a phone number, the HLR passes the decrypted phone number to the portable device. The benefit of this KIK procedure is that it is fast and has low mutual information between the identity information of the portable device and the HLR. In the conventional GSM system, the identity information that is stored on the HLR is less than a hundred bytes and the subscriber identity information may be updated only periodically. The card
