There is also a new option for free users to send an e-mail to all of your reviewers. This eliminates the chance of trees going up with fruit falling on them from the reviewers who don't follow through. Adobe says that some of the AI (advanced imaging) editing tools are still being worked on. They're not quite ready, but we've included screenshots from the AI panel to show how these new editing tools work.. The new AI editing panel is where you can make adjustments to your photo based on types of lighting, the shapes and composition of your subject. You can use the slider to push shadows and highlights, as well as adjust exposure, brightness, contrast, and sharpness. There is also a new Histogram panel, which displays how the colors in an image are arranged. This includes the RGB (red, green, blue) lights and the color channels (Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, Black). You can also select a color in the image and change its brightness, or use the spot tool to mute a specific hue or color. Once again, we made sure that colors appeared natural when editing photographs. There's also an option to manually adjust the Hue/Saturation layer for most photographs. This is good for consumers who are looking to maximize their images. The AI panel allows scans to get a deeper level of clean-ups and editing. It's worth noting that the AI panel still needs some improvement as well, and while it's a bit confusing, it does unlock some new editing options. Basically, if the AI panel doesn't tell you something is in focus, it's an excellent replacement.
